Directions for Questions 22-25: Read the following passage and answer the questions.

As for Conrad the literary craftsman, opposing him for the moment to Conrad the showman of the human comedy, the quality that all who write about him seem chiefly to mark in him is his scorn of conventional form, his tendency to approach his story from two directions at once, his frequent involvement in apparently inextricable snarls of narrative, sub-narrative and sub-sub-narrative. 'Lord Jim, for example, starts out in the third person, presently swings into an exhaustive psychological discussion by the mythical Marlow, then goes into a brisk narrative at second (and sometimes at third) hand, and finally comes to a halt upon an unresolved dissonance, a half-heard chord of the ninth: 'And that's the end. He passes away under a cloud, inscrutable at heart, forgotten, unforgiven, and excessively romantic.' 'Falk' is also a story within a story; this time the narrator is one who had not spoken before, a man over fifty.' In 'Amy Foster' romance filtered through the prosaic soul of a country doctor; it most as if a statistician told the tale of Horatius at the bridge. In 'Under Western Eyes' the obfuscation is achieved by 'a teacher of languages,' endlessly lamenting his lack of the 'high gifts of imagination and expression.' In 'Youth' and 'Heart of Darkness' the chronicler and speculator is the shadowy Marlow, a 'cloak to goe inisabell' for Conrad himself. In 'Chance' there are two separate stories, imperfectly welded together. Elsewhere there are hesitations, goings back, interpolations, and interludes in the Socratic manner. And almost always there is heaviness in the getting under weigh. In 'Heart of Darkness' we are on the twentieth page before we see the mouth of the great river, and in 'Falk' we are on the twenty-fourth before we get a glimpse of Falk. 'Chance' is nearly half done before the drift of the action is clearly apparent. In 'Almayer's Folly' we are thrown into the middle of a story, and do not discover its beginning until we come to 'An Outcast of the Islands,' a later book. As in structure, so in detail. Conrad pauses to explain, to speculate, and to look about. Whole chapters concern themselves with detailed discussions of motives, with exchange of views, with generalizations abandoned as soon as they are made. Even the author's own story, 'A Personal Record' starts near the end, and then goes back, halting tortuously, to the beginning.

21) The author of the passage mentions which of the following in the passage?

- (a) Conrad's autobiography
(b) Conrad's innovative use of contrasting characters in storytelling
(c) Conrad's innovative use of contrasting characters in storytelling
(d) Conrad's ability to keep surprise under wraps the end.

22) According to the author, 'Falk' 'Chance' and 'Almayer's Folly' are similar in which aspect??

- (a) In all these works, the protagonist is not readily understood.
(b) The works employ a narrative that is not typical of Conrad.
